

醫學雋語

Whenever the body of an animal is subdivided to its ultimate parts, one always finally arrives at a limited number of chemical atoms...One draws the conclusion in harmony with this observation, that all forms of activity arising in the animal body must be a result of the simple attractions and repulsions which be observed in the coming together of those elementary objects.

Quarterly Review

~Carl Friedrich Wilhelm Ludwig, 1858

摘自Medical in Quotations

特
載